

Management of Volunteers: National Occupational Standards 2008

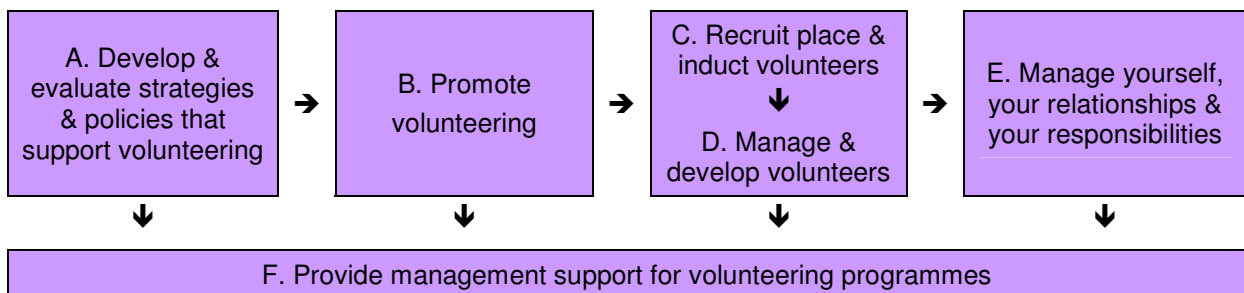

Many people who work in a UK Voluntary and Community Sector Organisation will often find themselves with a responsibility for developing and implementation a volunteer strategy.

These National Occupational Standards define the whole spectrum of activities involved in the “Management of Volunteers” and will help you to carry out this role effectively.

Please note: training providers who wish to develop qualifications from the management of volunteers standards should visit the webpage at <http://www.ukworkforcehub.org.uk/DisplayPage.asp?pageid=12605> alongside the introduction below. There is an interactive PDF version of the standards coming soon - for more information join the NOS Mailing List by emailing workforcehub@ukworkforcehub.org.uk quoting MVNOS.

Introduction

Many people in the UK are involved in the development and implementation of the volunteering strategy within their organisation. These National Occupational Standards define the whole spectrum of activities required to achieve this effectively.

If you are in a role where you are required to carry out any of the above then these standards are for you. It may be a role you do as a volunteer or as part of your paid work, it might be the focus of your working remit or just a small part of it, either way you will find these standards are an incredible use in supporting you to do your job well.

These standards have been designed primarily for those working in the voluntary and community sector (VCS) but they should also be appropriate if you work in the public sector, such as in a hospital or school.
